p. 194. "I have recounted above the shocking havoc of the small-pox amongst our Queen Charlotte Indians, likewise the summary measures I adopted to stamp it out of Skincuttle Inlet to that, it had been my already-mentioned misfortune to carry the plague to the tribes along the North and South Bentinck Arms of the mainland. And now a similar fatality seemed to be pursuing me."

(They had picked up a white man at New Aberdeen, he fell ill with smallpox, and capt. put him ashore at meals).

"... scarce had the sick man landed when the Indians again caught it; and in a very short space of time some of our best friends of the Ninstence or Cape St. James tribe - to my sorrow, seeing how few genuine friends we counted in any of the tribes - had disappeared for ever from the scene. It was long before health could be restored to the surroundings of ~~the~~ our little colony" p. 195
