NWC

p 306 informed us that most of the tribe had left their winter quarters and distributed themselves among the islands for the summer. They return to their winter houses about the end of August.... We went ashore where one of their winter houses stood. The entrance was cut out of a large tree and carved all the way up and down. The door was like a man's head and the passage into the house was between his teeth and was built before they knew the use of axes...."
